THE AUTOMOBILE

VOL. XVI.

NEW YORK—THURSDAY, JANUARY 3, 1907—CHICAGO

No. 1

PATHFINDER FORCING ITS WAY SOUTHWARD

ROADS that are such only in name will be the pathway of the Oldsmobile, that is persistently forcing its way southward, from now to the finish of its journey to the wind-swept Florida beach that connects fair Ormond with picturesque Daytona. Telegraph facilities in northwestern North Carolina may not be of the very best, but, barring mishaps, the Oldsmobile Pathfinder crossed the Virginia-North Carolina line on New Year's Day. The last information was from a little railroad junction a few miles north of the border, not far from Danville, Va., one of the largest towns in the Old Dominion, outside of Richmond. The message was confined to the five words: "Out all night. Heavy rain."

Contrary to precedent, however, the road for the greater part of the first end of the trip has been found to be uncommonly good for this season of the year. On the stretch from New York to Hagerstown, Md., but a few miles of poor road were encountered, though the going was more or less rough in places, owing to the freezing weather, as well as slippery occasionally from snow. This enabled a good pace to be maintained, an
